Additionally, it has maintained 100 per cent utilisation of fly ash — a high-volume industrial byproduct — since FY21, reflecting sustained progress across its operations.

The company is advancing a strong circular economy approach by converting waste streams such as ash, slag, and refinery residues into gainful resources such as in cement, bricks, and road construction, and other byproducts supplied to downstream industries through strategic partnerships.

It is also enhancing resource efficiency through initiatives like tailings recovery and dry tailings management — tailings being the residual materials left after extracting valuable minerals from ore — which improve material recovery while reducing water use, with processed tailings increasingly repurposed for industrial applications, the statement added.
