Vedanta Split Explained: Record Date, Eligibility and Key Details

Vedanta Demerger Record Date: Shares of mining corporation Vedanta Ltd. will remain in focus today, April 30, as today is the ex-demerger date to become eligible in the mining company's split. The company had fixed Friday, May 1, as the record date for the demerger.

A demerger is when a company splits its business into separate, independent entities. In Vedanta's case, the company plans to divide its large, diversified operations into multiple focused businesses. These include segments like aluminium, oil & gas, power, steel, and base metals.

What is the record date and why May 1 matters?

The record date is a cut-off date. It decides which shareholders are eligible to receive shares in the newly created companies after the demerger.

If you hold Vedanta shares on or before May 1, you will be considered eligible. Based on the final structure, you may receive shares of the new entities in proportion to your existing holding.

The record date for the demerger is May 1, 2026. However, since markets will remain shut on that day due to Maharashtra Day, the effective ex-date becomes April 30. Investors must buy shares at least one trading day prior to this (given the T+1 settlement cycle) to be eligible. Purchases made on or after April 30 will not qualify for the demerger benefits.

If you buy shares after this date, you may not get those benefits.

trading will begin at 10:00 AM, reflecting the ex-demerger price.

The valuation of the four demerged entities will be derived from the difference between Vedanta's closing price on April 29 and its opening price discovered during the SPOS on April 30.

Vedanta Valuation After Demerger

Brokerage firm Nuvama sees the consolidated value of Vedanta at Rs 936 per share before the demerger, according to CNBC TV-18 report.
