Speaking exclusively from the St Petersburg International Economic Forum (SPIEF), Vedanta Chairman Anil Agarwal shares his vision for India's economic future, highlighting the country's vast potential in mining, exploration, critical minerals and manufacturing. Agarwal argues that India possesses significant untapped geological resources and stresses the need for greater investment in exploration, technology and entrepreneurship to strengthen the nation's resource security.

In this conversation, he discusses the growing geopolitical importance of critical minerals, Vedanta's ambitions in zinc and silver production, India's relationship with Russia, and why he remains strongly optimistic about the country's long-term growth prospects. Agarwal also delivers a message to global investors, describing India as one of the world's most compelling investment destinations, driven by rising incomes, a growing middle class and strong entrepreneurial energy.

Watch the full interview for insights into India's manufacturing ambitions, the global race for critical minerals and the opportunities shaping the country's next phase of economic growth.
